THEME OF THE SEMINAR

Disaster management in India presents a complex and evolving landscape where legal frameworks play a pivotal role in shaping preparedness, response, and recovery efforts. This topic explores the critical issues and perspectives within India's legal framework for disaster management, aiming to unravel the challenges and opportunities inherent in navigating legal frontiers in this domain.

India, a country prone to various natural and man-made disasters, faces unique legal challenges in effectively managing and mitigating risks associated with such events. From legislative gaps and ambiguities to judicial interpretations and community engagement strategies, the legal landscape of disaster management in India encompasses a myriad of complexities that demand careful scrutiny.

By delving into legislative frameworks such as the Disaster Management Act of 2005 and its subsequent amendments, this research seeks to assess the effectiveness of existing laws in addressing the diverse range of disasters encountered in India. Furthermore, it aims to examine the role of the judiciary in interpreting and enforcing these laws, particularly in matters of liability, compensation, and accountability.

Community participation and legal empowerment emerge as crucial facets of disaster governance in India, with a need to explore strategies for promoting greater engagement and resilience at the grassroots level. Additionally, the intersection of human rights principles and disaster management practices warrants careful examination, particularly concerning the protection of vulnerable populations such as women, children, and marginalized communities.

Moreover, in an increasingly interconnected world, the topic also delves into the implications of international law and cross-border cooperation on disaster management in India. By analyzing India's legal obligations under international frameworks
